

Leaving a Legacy

Our footprints in the sands of time will be quickly swooshed away. What will future generations remember about our “dash between the dates”?

I have many fond memories of my grandparents. I remember looking through Mamaw’s thirty-five photo albums, giggling at funny-dressed relatives. Laughter is part of my grandmother’s legacy. But more importantly, my grandparents left a legacy of godliness. You can’t leave that stashed away in your safe-deposit box. You can’t stick it in a photo album. It can’t be funded in a trust. However, a legacy of godliness is an investment that pays dividends to future generations.

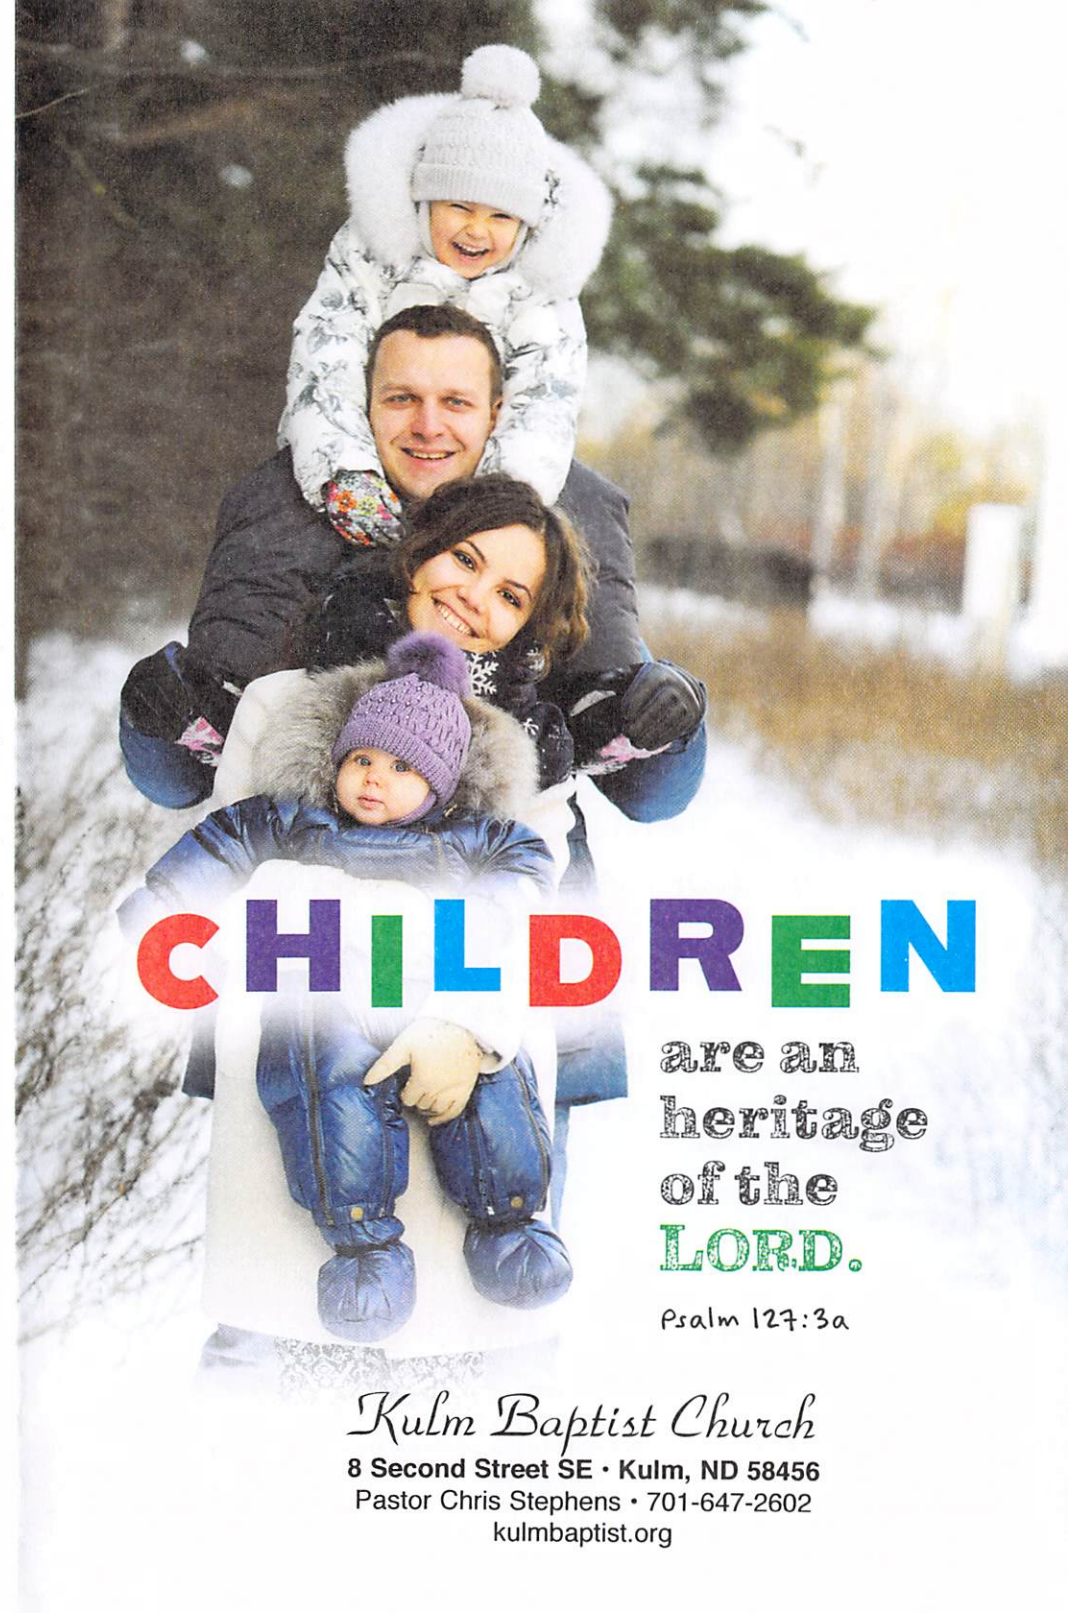

The memory of seeing my grandparents reading their Bibles encourages me to read mine. Hearing their prayers and sharing requests with them reinforced my prayer life. Their faithful participation in church and acts of unselfishness, like feeding strangers on their back porch, left footprints beckoning me to follow.

Passing on a legacy of godliness requires prayer. Our prayers should be that our descendants will love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind and strength (Mark 12:30). As that prayer is answered, everything else will fall into place.

Passing on a legacy of godliness requires unconditional love, like God’s love for us. It requires time, unselfishness and sacrifice. An inheritance to give to our loved ones is something we work toward all our lives. A legacy of godliness is no different. We won’t know what will happen with those legacies, but God promises that our labors are not in vain (1 Corinthians 15:58). Investing in godliness will reap rewards. Psalm 112:6b says, “The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.” What eternity-impacting memories are you making?
